Actions to Stop Doing:

The biggest thing our team needs to stop doing is have Scrum meetings which are closer to ten minutes than fifteen, as we are not communicating enough.

In general, though, we aren't doing enough, so there are few activities we can stop, much less want to stop.

Actions to Start Doing:

We need to leave more time to merge projects and be better about merging our work as we go.

We need to determine task dependencies so we can actually get started on the things we say we are going to work on, rather than pick something then discover we can't really get started on it until some other thing is finished.

We also need to put some actual work into determining done conditions for our tasks and user stories.

Tasks should be split up into smaller items. Smaller task items means more detailed consideration into what goes into each item as well as meaning we can check them off sooner, which is good for moral.

Keep Doing:

We have been good about holding our scrum meetings and keeping them under fifteen minutes. Members are on time and don't monopolize the time. We would like to keep doing that.

Finished:

We finished working on the visualization of completion of tasks as well as setting up habit reminders.

Not completed:

We did not manage to completely set up adding reoccurring habits and non-reoccurring tasks to write to firebase. We got half of that, the non-reoccurring tasks are done, but half way is a far cry from complete.
